

From the year 1880, until the mid-1900s, the city of Chicago was a major center of the American West. It was the largest city in the world at the time, and its population grew from 400,000 in 1840 to over 3 million by 1900. The city's growth was fueled by its location on the Great Lakes and its access to the Mississippi River. Chicago was a major center of industry, particularly in the steel and meat-packing industries. It was also a major center of transportation, with the city's location on the Great Lakes and the Mississippi River making it a major hub for shipping and trade. The city's growth was also fueled by its location on the Great Lakes and the Mississippi River, which made it a major center of industry and transportation.
